TO BONA FIDE INVESTORS.

THE DIRECTORS of a PUBLIC COMPANY, the Head Offices of which are situate in the City of Manchester, with Branches to be opened in two important towns in England, having completed their arrangements, beg respectfully to call the particular attention of the public to their investment.

The concern, previously and for over twenty years, has been the property of one private gentleman, during which time it has been in active operation, and has returned very flattering profits, which profits will be considerably augmented by the introduction of additional capital, the Vendor having come to an arrangement with the present Company for that purpose.

As this is an undertaking of a substantial character, and one which cannot fail to return first-class Dividends on investments, it is requested that adventitious speculators seeking promotion money, and others bagatelling in questionable concerns, will not make applications for particulars; but to all who desire to secure a permanent income, from the humble investor of five pounds to the more fortunate one of five thousand, the Directors will give the fullest information; and they respectfully solicit such persons to write for Prospectuses immediately, to

NEW NOVEL BY JEANIE HARING.

This day, at all Libraries, Three Volumes, crown 8vo.

THROUGH THE MIST. By Jeanie Hering, Author of "Truth will Out," "Golden Days," "Garry," &c.

"The two young heroines of the novel, Dulcie and Ruby, are a charming pair of twin sisters.....We have seldom met with more charming girls than these two sisters.....they are just what country girls of the best kind are in that happy period of life when girlhood and womanhood are meeting.....The breezy sense of freedom, the constant presence of the heather and the sea, the burn-side and the bleak hill path, supplies a large amount of local labour, and helps greatly in the lifelikeness of the book.....The two old aunties are well-drawn portraits.....Through the Mist is a readable, pleasant book. It aims at nothing great, but accomplishes something very fresh and tender."—Saturday Review.

"Miss Hering has produced a very readable novel, and one that contains much clever writing.....Some of the characters are depicted with much force and humour. Dulcie Duncan herself, and the two Miss McInnes, are especially fine creations."—Scotsman.

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

With the Fifth Volume the ACADEMY entered at the beginning of the present year upon a new phase of its existence. Instead of 480 pages of text a year, it now publishes, in fifty-two weekly numbers, 1040 pages, each of which will contain one-fourth more matter than the old ACADEMY page.

Three-fourths of each number of the new ACADEMY is devoted to Literature of the Imagination, Travels and Antiquities, History and Biography, and includes regular notices of the Picture Exhibitions, the Music of the Season, and the current Drama, English and French. There are periodical news-letters on literary, artistic, and scientific subjects from the chief capitals of Europe, and from America; and an adequate space is set apart for correspondence between literary men, jottings of interest, publishers' announcements, personal news, and the like. In all these matters the ACADEMY tells people of all classes who are aiming at the higher culture, what to choose and what to discard, in unmistakeable terms and with promptitude.

The remaining fourth part of the periodical is occupied with scientific matters interesting to a smaller class of readers, but divested as far as possible of all unnecessary technicalities which render them uninteresting or unintelligible to the educated as distinguished from the scientific reader. The various departments of knowledge have now become so minutely specialised, that even the scientific man can no longer hope to keep pace with discovery in all directions at once, and beyond the limits of his own peculiar study occupies to a greater or less extent the position of the educated layman or general reader. So that the wants of the small scientific class are in this respect identical, or nearly so, with those of the larger reading public. These requirements vary in different countries and at different periods, and can only be ascertained by actual experience. Our experience during the past four years has been that the scientific matter to be found in the ACADEMY has been pitched in too high a key, or at least has been presented in too technical a form to be so practically useful even to the scientific reader in this country, and at the present time, as it might without any diminution of fulness or accuracy be made. We propose then to ourselves a much more difficult task than we have hitherto attempted, viz. that of making this department of the ACADEMY useful to all, and engaging the attention and interest of all educated persons in the progress of European knowledge.

This department will embrace Natural Philosophy, Theology, and the Science of Language, especially of the English Language and Dialects, and the very important and interesting study of Comparative Philology, in connection with the Mythology, Folklore, Manners, Customs, and Institutions of the various races of Mankind.

It may be asked, why retain the name ACADEMY if the paper is to be so entirely re-organised as to form to all intents and purposes a new critical organ?

We have re-organised the paper because we think that such a critical organ as we have described is wanted. As to the retention of the name, a few words of explanation are necessary.

Very few persons have, we think, understood what was meant by calling the old fortnightly periodical, which we now propose to supersede, the ACADEMY.

The word "Academy" suggests to most average Englishmen, in the first instance, the idea of a second-rate and pretentious private school. It is also the name of a chartered Institution in London, which has won a reputation for fairness and discrimination in hanging pictures. As the name of this periodical, it appears to have given the impression to some persons that we propose to ourselves to treat of matters exclusively interesting to schoolmasters and professors at the Universities. But in all European languages except the English an "Academy" means a central organ of sound information and correct taste in intellectual matters. The great French Academy founded by Richelieu has more particularly taken under its charge the maintenance of the purity of the French language. The Academies founded in the principal German Capitals, and elsewhere, in imitation of the French, have laid a greater stress upon the maintenance of correct information in matters of scientific knowledge; and the renowned Academy of France has added to itself special Academies having the same object.

Now it is in the sense in which the word is understood on the Continent, in the sense of a standard of correctness in intellectual matters, that the name was and is still applied to the ACADEMY Journal. The great national importance of concentrating the intellectual forces of a country is recognised in every country but our own; and this recognition has justified the employment of public funds for the maintenance of the Foreign Academies as public Institutions, and the partial support of their members. And the absence of such an Institution in England has had this result, that a larger amount of bad work both in literature and in science passes unchallenged in this country than in any other, standing upon the same level of civilisation.

What, then, in other countries is done for learning and science by means of an Institution supported at the public expense, we propose to accomplish in this country, not only for these but for all the materials of culture and refinement by means of a periodical subjected, after the English manner, to the economic conditions of supply and demand, viz. to keep the reader up to the mark of what is best in the world, to gibbet mercilessly what is bad, and to criticise with sympathetic fairness what falls between these two extremes.

Keeping thus always to the main stream of the best production, we shall have to point to Germany for Science, to France for Art, but to our own country for Poetry and Fiction, for the Literature of Manners and Society, for Travel and Adventure, as well as for the great philosophic ideas which are transforming the mental horizon of mankind.

But there is, we are firmly convinced, no necessary connection between setting up a standard of correctness and being unintelligible or unattractive to the average reader. It is true that much of the attractive writing in this country is deficient in accuracy, and perhaps no less true, that our own work hitherto has preferred accuracy to attractiveness. Still we believe that it is practicable to unite both these qualities in criticism; and by our elaborate organisation of departmental editing, we confidently expect that we shall be able, as we have determined, to unite them in our new issue.
